The National Autonomous University of Mexico is a public research university in Mexico. It ranks highly in world rankings based on the university's extensive research and innovation. UNAM has several campuses in the Metropolitan Area of Mexico City, as well as many others in several locations across Mexico including Morelia, mainly aimed at research and graduate studies.
Dr. Pablo Jaramillo Lopez is a research professor at the Research Institute for Ecosystems and Sustainability at the National Autonomous University of Mexico in Morelia.

Pablo became interested in monarch butterflies while working on his PhD at the University of Western Ontario wondering why monarch butterflies always returned to the same forests in Mexico.

This led him to his current research interest aimed at recovering degraded soils using soil amendments and improving ecosystem restoration initiatives through community participation and engagement.
